

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The original impetus for this collection of papers representing the Harvard Program in Risk and Prevention came from a lunch in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in June 1994. Marc Camras, whom I had met at the International Child and Youth Care Conference in Milwaukee just a few weeks earlier and who had shared with me several of his papers written for the Risk and Prevention program, just happened to be visiting in Pittsburgh. We were meeting to discuss the papers and suddenly the idea hit. Why not assemble a group of such papers together in a journal to share with the rest of the child and youth work field? With that the concept was born, and long before I knew I would have the wonderful fortune to be able to spend a year on sabbatical at Harvard.

Two years later we are ready, and are honored, to bring out this theme edition of the Journal of Child and Youth Care Work. Many people have enabled it to come to fruition and I acknowledge them with deepest thanks. They include:

Andrew J. Schneider-Muñoz, who to my knowledge was the first child and youth care worker active in the field who went to the Harvard Graduate School of Education. Andy introduced me to Harvard students and faculty and, in addition to his own contribution of an article, made valuable suggestions for the collection. As a faculty member at the Child and Youth Care Learning Center at the University of Milwaukee-Wisconsin, Andy shares his knowledge and perspectives acquired in the Risk and Prevention program with the hundreds of child and youth workers he trains nationally every year.

Professor Michael J. Nakkula of the Risk and Prevention Program. Professor Nakkula served as the faculty sponsor for my 1995-1996 sabbatical year spent as a Visiting Scholar affiliated with the Risk and Prevention Program. His ideas, suggestions, dialogue and continuing interest and support, moral and other, enabled the collection to come together and in the process to be a very pleasurable experience for me. And, as I mention later, seeing him 'in action' working with youth utterly convinced me as to the relationship between the work of the Risk and Prevention Program and that of the child and youth field.

The paper authors. Prior to coming to Harvard for the year, I had the opportunity to meet Professor Robert Selman, and both Marc Camras and William Penuel who were completing their studies. Spending the year at Harvard enabled me to meet other Risk and Prevention faculty, students and graduates: Professors Gil Noam, Annie Rogers, Janine Bempechat, Thomas Shaw and Catherine Ayoub; and doctoral students Norma Jiminez, Victoria Nakkula, and Michael Karcher. In preparing their papers, many authors collaborated with others who are also acknowledged. I thank all of you for your pieces and the seminal work described in them, for your general interest in the journal and for your openness to the needs of child and youth care workers.

Martha Mattingly of the Program in Child Development and Child Care and Dean David Epperson of the School of Social Work. Special thanks are due for supporting my concept of a sabbatical and for granting it to me. Being 'on site' certainly aided the work of assembling the journal and enhanced my own understanding.

Gregory Hildebrand, the Managing Editor of the Journal of Child and Youth Care Work. An acknowledgment to him for his ongoing attention to the "nuts and bolts" work of copy editing, production dissemination and promotion, without which a journal simply does not get published.

– Karen Vander Ven